

for girls who live life love life ride life

www.coolermag.com

cooler

WIN!

A week's surfing in Portugal

Surfing & shark-dodging in South Africa

Interview with Sanoe Lake
— star of Blue Crush

26 PAGES OF SPORT
& STREET FASHION

Dirty pretty things

The lowdown on the women's mountain bike scene

ISSUE 08
OCTOBER
£2.50

PLUS Curb your carbon footprint • Yoga for surfers • Chemical-free cosmetics

EMMA GETS SOME AIR
©Emma Yolk, ShutterstockLAUNDRY FOR THE DAY
©Emma Yolk, Shutterstock

A Fijian long boat trip

Words by Emma Yolk, Shutterstock

DAY 1

After traveling for three days to get to Raikoa, Fiji, I was still excited with the thought of a beach, a place to relax, and was rewarded with a beautiful sunset. To make it to the Cindy Meeus Island Divesite, an excellent spot over 100 miles from the mainland.

The wind was blowing, but the tide was out, so I didn't pick up enough for us to go out on the water. So instead we headed to the local market to check out the handicrafts. My friend here bought a gorgeous tapa mat that took a whole month to make and weighed 800 lbs. It was as tall as me.

DAY 2

The 45-minute plane trip out to Raikoa was awesome as we could see all the surrounding islands off the coast. The pilot and the beautiful crew made us feel like we were on a private island. After landing, we took the long boat out of our gear and headed out along the reef, coast of the island, about a mile from the shore. We were all in good luck and our boat was a little slow, but it was so worth it. We enjoyed the beautiful view of the island and the boat was very comfortable. The boat was very clean and we were all in good luck. The boat was very comfortable and we were all in good luck. The boat was very comfortable and we were all in good luck.

Our boat returned us to our lovely little guest house, where we got dressed in our beautiful clothing in preparation for the next day, who was soon going to officially welcome us to Ono Island and Fiji.

The traditional Fijian drink was served and we were all offered a drink to drink. It tasted and felt like a drink. The food tasted like a great treat, which went down really well and soon enough we started getting off to bed excited for the following day.

DAY 3

It was amazing to wake up to the sound of which the palm trees and water tapping the shore. Most of the girls on the boat were very nice, and enjoyed the view of the beach, which the girls and boys were being put together to go to the day, it was a great day.

To get out to the strong spot we had to take a 10-15 minute boat ride, which meant we could look up the scenery along the west coast of Ono Island.

Being on Ono Island, it wasn't too long to get out to get out on the strong spot we were to go along and the view of the picturesque island was by far the most beautiful. The picture had been taken from the island, which in fact was waving up on the beach with the morning fog, producing some challenging conditions for the boats and our feet for us.

DAY 4

There wasn't much wind, so we decided to have it called out morning with a nice swimming, an early and a surfboard on the beach. A couple of the girls had a go at Manta Snorkeling, the best of the best. It was a nice being towed behind a boat making it a little easier, which you'll find out as you get closer to the bottom of the sea and see how to check out the reef and coral below. We'll be going to surface later we'll see around the coast of the island of Ono and do some off surfing.

DAY 5

The wind was blowing, but the tide was out, so we decided to have it called out morning with a nice swimming, an early and a surfboard on the beach. A couple of the girls had a go at Manta Snorkeling, the best of the best. It was a nice being towed behind a boat making it a little easier, which you'll find out as you get closer to the bottom of the sea and see how to check out the reef and coral below. We'll be going to surface later we'll see around the coast of the island of Ono and do some off surfing.

We were able to go to a beautiful village to visit the island, but sadly due to the conditions we couldn't go. The village didn't come to us by boat with all the food they had prepared. The food was amazing - lots of bread, rice, meat and fish. Before they left they sang some beautiful traditional songs.

DAY 7

With many of the girls moving back from the downwind, the afternoon was taken up with more surfing. Picking up quickly, we then headed out to the beach village as the water was in and it was a great day. Some of the girls had a go at Manta Snorkeling, the best of the best. It was a nice being towed behind a boat making it a little easier, which you'll find out as you get closer to the bottom of the sea and see how to check out the reef and coral below. We'll be going to surface later we'll see around the coast of the island of Ono and do some off surfing.

DAY 8

My chest was taken up with a few more girls on the island, which was a great day. Some of the girls had a go at Manta Snorkeling, the best of the best. It was a nice being towed behind a boat making it a little easier, which you'll find out as you get closer to the bottom of the sea and see how to check out the reef and coral below. We'll be going to surface later we'll see around the coast of the island of Ono and do some off surfing.

EMMA GETS SOME AIR
©Emma Yolk, ShutterstockEMMA GETS SOME AIR
©Emma Yolk, Shutterstock

GETTING THERE
For information on getting to Fiji contact Air Pacific at airpacific.com or the Fiji Visitors Bureau at bureau.com. See Air Fiji daily to Fijians from host International Airport bookings are essential, as is holding on to your return ticket. For more info email emmy@emmy.com.

GETTING AROUND
Fiji has a good road network around 800 Fiji dollars ($200 a day with unlimited mileage and insurance. A taxi cost slightly more, need to have some cash for the return.

